OU.S. NAVY LEFT, SAYS ADMIRAL SIMS

being made by men in Washington regardless of such recommendations. Admiral Sims declared that the whole matter of awarding medals ought to be abolished, as it was a constant source of

"If the Government could see its way clear to wipe out the business and start clean, I think a majority of the service would be pleased," he declared, The whole business leads to trouble, aw this coming and tried by every eans to head it off before it became ablic. If I could have had my way If I could have had my way e matter, would have been settled thout a peep in the newspapers, and wouldn't have to be washing our ty linen this way."

Asks Justice for Daniels.

I the opening of the hearing Repubdican and Democratic members of the committee clashed when Senator Pitt-man, Democrat, moved to have Secretary Daniels testify first. Admiral Sims nat patiently at one end of the committee table while the matter was threshed out.

"We ought to conduct this hearing with at least police court justice," Sen-ator Pittman protested. "Inasmuch as the Secretary of the Navy appears to be on trial, I think we ought to give him

"If it is a trial, there is no precedent for hearing the defendant first," Senafor Hale, chairman, retorted, Senator Pittman insisted that it would be "dis-courteous not to hear Daniels first," but the committee voted 3 to 2 for proceeding with Sims.

Attacks Censorship.

Admiral Sims reviewed the history of the controversy which became known to the public through a letter he wrote Secretary Daniels December 17. He had previously taken the matter up with Daniels and the Knight board in an effort to settle the controversy within the navy, he told the committee. In a formal statement the Admiral declared that a form of censorship pre-vents constructive criticism from navy officials and that as a result the United States Navy is trailing other nations.

We are always considerably behind We are always considerably behind them in this respect because our navy lacks constructive criticism from the public and necessarily so because our naval officers are forbidden to publish anything without the permission of, and usually censorship by, the department. This is, to say the least,, a singular regulation to be enforced in a democratic form of Government, and the inception of the control of the con evitable result is that the American pub-lic knows less about naval matters than the public of any other considerable maritime power, because the officers of the latter are permitted, under certain regulations, when not on duty to publish any article in criticism or sugges-tion which, in their judgment, will be of benefit to their service or their cour try. A similar permission granted to American naval officers would not only be of great benefit to the public and the navy, but the navy cannot attain its maximum efficiency without it." Admiral Sims explained that criticism of naval awards does not proceed from personal motives. He said: "Nothing could be further from the truth, for in probably the nearly unanimous opinion of the officers of the navy certain mistakes were made in the jawards in question which not only involve the minor matter of injustice to individual officers but the much more serious matter of the viciation of the military traditions of all navies as re-lated to the maintenance of the fighting morale, without which military forces can be of little use in war.

"I had no intention of kicking up a row and only sought to do my duty." He then read the letter received from Secretary Daniela asking what recommander Bagley and his own reply

He made frequent outspoken and say castic answers which brought laughter from the crowded committee room Scores of wives and women relatives on naval officers attended, following the hearing closely and interrupting fre quently with laughter.

Denying reports that every member of his London staff was recommended for a medai Admiral Sims declared that out of 202 officers on his staff only nineteen were recommended. Out of the 5,000 officers under his command Admiral Sims recommended decorations for 440 he said, and of this number 218 were approved without change in Washington.

Repeatedly the Admiral paid high tribute to the men on his staff. He mentioned the work of Commander J.

V. Babcock, who drew up the plans for nvoying transports across the Atlantic "I knew that if we had had any con derable disaster to a troop transport would involve my neck," he explained with a grin, "but nevertheless I delegated this matter to a member of my staff, and so confident was I of his ability that I never gave the matter a member of the staff, and so confident was I of his ability that I never gave the matter a moment's thought except when some thing was brought to me."

This officer, Commander Babcock, was recommended for a Distinguished Service Medal and got a navy cross, the lower medal.
"There was no officer to whom the people owe so much," the Admiral con linued. "I don't care a cent-if the Sec-retary had made no other change, that n itself was destructive of the morale.

Bagley the Last Straw,

"Take the case of the Secretary's own brother-in-law. He was recommended for a navy cross and got the Distin-guished Service Medal, regardless of my explanations that it would injure morale. When such recommendations as that were made regardless of my explana-tions that they would injure the morale of the service, you can imagine why morale has been shot to pieces, and why there is no navy left—that was the last

"Well, we heard that there was no many left before the war," Senator Pittman interrupted.
"You haven't got one now," Admiral

Sims rejoined. Senator Pittman asked if "some one besides the commanding officer shouldn't decide whether his staff is the greatest staff in the world."

"I never said my staff was the great-est staff in the world," Admiral Sims re-torted, "That's not the way to get along with this investigation, either," he added sharply, leaving Senators, accustomed to the obliging deference of wit nesser, aghast. The audience man! fested great enjoyment. "We who wer over there with the men saw them work and sweat blood. Nobody sitting three thousand miles away can judge the services they rendered."

"Don't you think it is wise to have a board to review these matters?" asked Fenator Pittman.

"It's all right as long as they don't "But when they went over the recom-mendations they didn't even ask me to see the list or call me in to give explanations that would have avoided this

"The trouble is that they didn't do what you wanted them to do, isn't it?" asked Senator Trammell. "Wasn't the Secretary absolutely within his rights in vising the list?"
"He was absolutely within his rights," simiral Sime agreed.

Why He Didn't Fight.

had not recommended any enlisted men decorations, the chief reason being that the bulk of the navy did no fighting and did not come into contact with the enemy, and that in the branch which did the air service, it was the pilots, who are all commissioned men, who engaged

"I didn't have a war to fight," Admiral Cims explained. "We might be compared to motor lorries trying to get men and supplies across safely. We didn't have any naval warfare because the enemy wouldn't come out and fight."

As to men who lost their ships in en gaging the enemy and falled to inflict damage on him, "you can take it from me that service." he declared.

office than on that of men at sea; and if Italians or the Americans.
that is the tradition of the navy, then it "No part of the Allies," he said, "could mell suggested.
This Admiral Fines took as a direct re-he war. The Admiral paid especial tribute to Lieut. A. L. Gates, Ensign H. C. Hammann. Lieut. G. H. Ludlow, Capt. H. I. Cone and Lieut. Frank Bruce, all of whom were given decorations inferior to hose recommended by Sims.

U. S. TROOPS PRAISED BY SOLDIER-ARTIST

Capt. Bairnsfather Not in Sympathy With Dry Lid.

Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather, the noted cartoonist and war humorist, began his first American lecture tour at Carnegie Hall last night with an informal talk on "'Old Bill' and Me," in the course of which he told an audience liberally comthat it's against the traditions of the navies of the world to cite a man for had seen service in the American Army had seen service in the American Army that it was ridiculous to attempt to ap-"I think the greater premium has been portion the credit for winning the war aced on the service of the man in the either to the British, the French, the that is the tradition of the navy, then it ought to be abolished," Senator Tram-have done without the other part, and we certainly couldn't have done without This Admiral Sins took as a direct re-flection on his staff, and accused Senator Trammell of sneering at his associates in celebrated pictures, for he said he was "sick of the war," and never did like "this fighting with strangers." He re-lated how his first sketch, the well known "I wonder where that one went to?" came into being out of the desire to break the sheer misery of duty in the front line trenches.

Others of his sketches were thrown on a screen, while the soldier-artist made amusing comments. Apparently the imminence of prohibition in this country seemed to irk him, for he said that "if they'd taken bad language and run away from the British army it

Somebody Will Be Happy for Breakfast!

"If you always eat a breakfast like that, you'll live to be a hundred years old," said the waiter to a rich man who was eating Virginia Sweet Pancakes, and he tipped him with a $2 bill.

> "They all loves'um," said the waiter in telling the story to the cook.

No home-made pancake batter is as good or as convenient to use when time counts most.

Easiest to prepare; simply add milk and water-no lumps - no overnight setting-to make delicious golden brown pancakes, waffles or muffins. Directions and recipes with every generous package. Most popular with all the family in the best of homes. The best tasting energy food

-economical - appetizing! Say—"VIRGINIA SWEET" to your grocer, instead of "pancake flour."
